

CAPSULE SUMMARY

SITE NAME: William Reid House

SITE NUMBER: #13/29

APPROXIMATE BUILDING DATE: c.1884, c.1897

LOCATION: 21301 Slidell Road, Boyds, MD 20841

The William Reid farmhouse is a 2 1/2 story, three-bay, side-gabled frame structure which has been considerably enlarged over the years. The central entrance has a transom and there is a second-story centered gable covered with fish-scale shingles; the gable features an arched window. Other windows are six/six, and all gable ends have small, paired, four-pane windows. The house is covered with asphalt shingles, has a patterned metal roof, and rests on a stone foundation. There are eight outbuildings on the site, the most notable of which is a late nineteenth or early twentieth century gable-roof barn, unusual for its horizontal clapboard siding.

Master Plan Recommendation:

Historic Preservation Ordinance Criteria

(1) Historical and cultural significance. The historic resource:

- ☒ a. Has character, interest or value as part of the development, heritage or cultural characteristics of the county, state or nation;
- ☐ b. Is the site of a significant historic event;
- ☐ c. Is identified with a person or group of persons who influenced society;
- ☐ d. Exemplifies the cultural, economic, social, political or historic heritage of the county and its communities.

(2) Architectural and design significance. The historic resource:

- ☒ a. Embodies the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction;
- ☐ b. Represents the work of a master;
- ☐ c. Possesses high artistic values;
- ☐ d. Represents a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction; or
- ☒ e. Represents an established and familiar visual feature of the neighborhood, community or county due to its singular physical characteristic or landscape.

Environmental Setting Recommendation:

The environmental setting should be approximately rectangular in shape and bounded:

on the west by Slidell Road;
on the south by the top of the rise, beginning at the point where the driveway meets Slidell Road, and continuing along a line running east and perpendicular to the road;
on the east by the first row of trees at the edge of the fields which abut the outbuildings; and on the north by the the highest ridge visible when standing at that side of the house.

The setting would include all of the outbuildings as well as the driveway from Slidell Road to the house.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The William Reid farmhouse is a 2½ story, three-bay, side-gabled frame structure which has been considerably enlarged over the years. The central entrance has a transom and there is a second-story centered gable covered with fish-scale shingles; the gable features an arched window. The windows are six/six, and all gable ends have small, paired, four-pane windows. The house is covered with asphalt shingles, has a patterned metal roof, and rests on a stone foundation. There are interior chimneys at each gable end on the main block; the chimney on the north end is larger than the one on the south suggesting that there may be an earlier dwelling enclosed by the existing structure.

A one-story, shed-roof, metal-covered porch extends across the full width of the main (west) facade. The northernmost bay of the porch is enclosed by a one-story projecting bay with a single, fixed-pane window and vertical siding in its center section. Only one of the round, tapered columns which originally supported the porch remains.

A gable-roof wing extends to the rear from the northeast corner of the east elevation. Attached to this wing and surrounding it on two sides is a large two-story, three-bay, shed-roof addition, with entrances on all three elevations; it appears to be used primarily for storage.

On the north elevation, a one-story, shed-roof addition (part concrete-block and part clapboard) is attached to the rear portion of the facade. Entrance to the addition is on its east elevation.

There are eight outbuildings, the most significant being a late nineteenth or early twentieth century gable-roof barn which is unusual for its horizontal clapboard siding (as opposed to the more common vertical) and its louvered vents. A shed-roof, metal-covered overhang covers the entrances to the barn, which rests on a stone foundation and has a metal roof. The barn has a one-story, shed-roof corn-crib-and-machine-shed addition at the rear, covered with vertical plank siding, and there is an adjacent silo.

The remaining outbuildings include a two-story gambrel-roof dairy barn of clapboard and rusticated concrete-block with decorative stone quoins; adjacent gable-roof, concrete-block dairy equipment buildings, also with stone quoins; a metal-sided cow barn; a shed-roof hen house with vertical siding; two small clapboarded structures, one of which is gable-roofed and the other shed-roofed; another gable-roof shed with vertical plank siding; and a small one-bay, shed-roof structure covered in asphalt shingles on the south side of the house.

The house appears poorly maintained, and some of the outbuildings are in a deteriorated condition.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT Wm. Reid & Aloysius Reid (builders)
(architect unknown)

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The William Reid farm is historically significant because it is associated with an earlier, predominantly agrarian, period in the County's history and with several families who were early settlers in the area, the Reids and the Kingsburys. In addition, it is a largely-intact late nineteenth- early twentieth century farm complex of the type which is rapidly disappearing from rural areas. Architecturally, it is significant as a late-Victorian vernacular farmhouse and it is a familiar visual feature in the neighborhood.

The farmhouse is located on approximately 291 acres and is part of four tracts known as "Conclusion", "Addition to Conclusion", "Pork and Potatoes", and "Benjamin's Discovery". Reid family ownership can be traced to the 1820s, when Rachel Reid and her husband, Jonas, conveyed a parcel of land in Frederick County to one John Runn in exchange for 239 acres owned by Runn in Montgomery County, part of "Conclusion". The property conveyed to Rachel Reid had been sold to Runn by Thomas M. Reid, Rachel's father, in 1810. After the death of Rachel and Jonas Reid, it was conveyed to their son, William Reid.⁽¹⁾

William Reid is listed in the 1870 census as a farmer, with real and personal property valued at $7300. Tax records for 1876 show an improvement on Reid's property valued at $150 which may have been the log dwelling mentioned at the sale of his property after he died; he is also shown on the 1878 Hopkins Atlas as owning a dwelling in the area.^(2,3)

In 1880 Aloysius Reid, William Reid's son, acquired approximately 245 acres of his property, sold under a court order after William Reid died intestate in 1879. At the request of William Reid's widow, Ann Sophia Reid, and their eight children, the property was sold at auction in February of 1880, with Aloysius Reid being the high bidder at $7.00 an acre.⁽⁴⁾

An advertisement in the Montgomery County Sentinel described the property as

"...about 1/2 woodland...the improvements consist of a log dwelling house, a stable, a meat house...also an apple orchard on the farm and a good spring near the house..."⁽⁵⁾

The log house mentioned in the advertisement may be part of the existing house.

Aloysius Reid is listed in the 1870 Census as a 46 year old farmer with assets of approximately $2500.⁽⁶⁾ In 1884, the value of improvements on his property rose to $642, and, in 1897, to $1100, indicating that the house may have been enlarged in those years. In 1916, after ownership had passed to Charles Kingsbury, the value of improvements increased to $1695, probably indicating further additions to the house.⁽⁷⁾

After the death, intestate, of Aloysius Reid in 1898, the property (295 acres) was again ordered sold at auction, with the proceeds to be divided among his wife and children; it was sold to Charles T. Kingsbury, Aloysius Reid's son-in-law, in 1899.⁽⁸⁾ In 1918, the same property (by then totaling some 322 acres) was conveyed to Ambrose Kingsbury, Charles' son.⁽⁹⁾ By 1952, when Ambrose Kingsbury sold it out of the family, the property on which the house and farm are located had been in the possession of the Reid-Kingsbury family for almost 150 years.

James E. Sutphin owned the property for a brief period, from 1952-1956, until it was sold to Merle A. Tuve (291.85 acres); it remained in the possession of the Tuve family for the next 22 years, until its sale in 1978 to the present owner, Eugene B. Casey.⁽¹⁰⁾

Dr. Tuve was a well-known physicist who served on the staff of the Carnegie Institution from 1926-1967 and held the position of Director of the Department of Terrestrial Magnetism. His research in this area in the 1920s led to the development of radar during World War II. In recognition of the importance of his scientific contributions, Dr. Tuve was awarded both the Presidential Medal of Merit and the Order of the British Empire. A trustee of Johns Hopkins, Dr. Tuve also served as the editor of the Journal of Physical Research and as Secretary of the National Academy of Science.

Architecturally, the main block has largely retained its original nineteenth century configuration; the rear wing has been greatly altered, but the alterations appear to date from the late nineteenth or early twentieth century.

The two barns on the property are excellent examples of the evolution of agricultural technology in the county and the resulting impact on the design of farm structures. The all-purpose wood-frame barn (which is not a bank barn) may date from the late nineteenth century although its siding is not vertical:

...Barns built well before 1900 were sheathed with a vertical board-and-batten siding, and were ventilated by air entering doors and windows and rising to exit through wood louvered windows high in the walls of the hayloft or up through wood cupolas on the roof ridge. By 1900, barn builders were eliminating the battens and louvers and allowing air to enter through spaces between the vertical siding..."⁽¹¹⁾

The dairy barn on the property illustrates the changing nature of the dairy industry in Montgomery County, as more stringent health regulations in the 1920s and 1930s forced county farmers to replace the all-purpose barn with more modern facilities:

"A major transition in barn design occurred during the 1920s...a result of several factors: the rise of dairy farming as a major industry, the stricter regulations imposed on dairy barns, the introduction of a new type of roof structure, the increased use of concrete block. By 1922, sanitation standards had become more important and many farmers were constructing the new, sanitary barn...Devoted solely to the milking of cows, (it had) concrete milking floors with haylofts above, (and was) all on one level, (and was built) of molded concrete blocks, rusticated (in some cases), rock-faced in others...Attention was paid to aesthetics by providing blocks of contrasting color for window and door surrounds and quoins at corners...(Concrete blocks) were readily available by the 1930s and...required a minimum of skill to use. Thus, throughout the 1930s and for decades afterwards, concrete blocks were used for cattle barns..."⁽¹²⁾

The dairy buildings on the Reid farm(probably dating from the 1930s) exhibit several of the characteristics of the buildings erected in the early decades of the twentieth century, ie: the rusticated concrete block construction and the decorative stone corner quoins. By the 1940s, "concrete block is now plain faced, instead of rusticated. Gone are the lighter colored block highlighting openings and corners. The windows have metal sash instead of wood..."⁽¹³⁾

The dairy complex and the frame barn on the Reid farm are, by their design, representative of particular stages in the evolution of farm buildings.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This is an L-shaped, frame farmhouse of two stories. The main (west) facade has three bays, with a central door and center gable roof. A partially-enclosed porch runs across the front of the house. There are pairs of small, gable-end windows and the main sashes are 6/6. The siding is rolled asphalt. The outline of the house, and large chimney stack on the north, interior end hint at the possibility of an earlier dwelling underneath the present appearance.

There are a number of barns and farm buildings on the property.
